Confessions of a meteorite hunter

January 29, 2016

Confessions of a meteorite hunter

Nina Lanza knows space rocks. In her day job as a staff scientist at Los Alamos National Laboratory, she operates the Curiosity Rover's ChemCam, using a rock-vaporizing laser to analyze the Martian surface. But as of last week, Lanza was having a very different kind of encounter with space rocks: She was picking them up off of the Antarctic ice.

Listen now.

Annie Minoff - Jan. 29, 2016

www.sciencefriday.com