

Abstract:

Export controls on HPC systems have historically been strict and despite simplifications over the years, the outlook is for continued constraints on both the development of and shipments of petascale through exascale supercomputers. The anticipated unprecedented levels of collaboration and co-design, both domestically and internationally, suggest a review of the regulations for their impact on the road to exascale.