

Katie H. Lim completed her Ph.D. studies at Yonsei University in 2018. After postdoctoral training at the Korea Institute of Science & Technology in 2020, she has been a postdoctoral research associate in the MPA-11 at Los Alamos National Laboratory. Broadly, her research interests are energy storage systems and energy conversion devices. At Los Alamos, she involves in developing high-temperature polymer-electrolyte membrane fuel cells.